Senate Votes War Curb, Reverses Self and Rejects Arms Aid Bill

John W. Finney

WASHINGTON, July 25 (NYT)—The Senate, in a series of sections, adopted yesterday amendments requiring the withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam in exchange for prisoners of war, but reversed itself by killing all but one of the amendments. The Senate then voted 69-21 to approve a bill to limit the number of American troops in Vietnam and to require the President to report to Congress on the progress of the withdrawal. The bill also includes provisions for the release of prisoners of war and for the withdrawal of troops from Vietnam. The Senate's action is seen as a significant step towards ending the Vietnam War.

While administration forces succeeded in killing the amendment, it was at the cost of scuttling the foreign aid bill, which contained the authorization for military assistance in the current fiscal year.

Seventh Game In Chess Series Is Adjourned

REYKJAVIK, July 25.—The seventh game of the Boris Spassky-Bobby Fischer world chess championship adjourned tonight after the 40th move, but champion Spassky played into tomorrow's time to figure out his 41st move.

It was given, sealed in an envelope, to the referee who will begin play with it tomorrow. Experts said the game could well end in a draw. Details on Page 2.

Field Reports Cast Doubt on Claim

Saigon Says It Seizes Quang Tri

By Sydney H. Schanberg

SAIGON, July 25 (NYT)—The Saigon Command said today that its troops had captured the walled inner Citadel of Quang Tri City during the morning and that they controlled "the whole" provincial capital. But reports from the field indicated that the claim was "somewhat premature and overstated." Sources in the field confirmed that two companies of South Vietnamese airborne soldiers—a maximum of about 400 men—had entered the Citadel through a bomb-created breach in the northeast wall. It is they said, troops were munched by the North Vietnamese inside. The South Vietnamese military spokesman in Saigon had said at the time that there was no report of any enemy resistance.

In claiming the recapture of the symbolically important northern town, which fell to the North Vietnamese on May 1, the spokesman also said "we have no report of any casualties" among South Vietnamese troops. With the kind of tank, mortar and machine-gun fire that has been pouring out of the Citadel for more than two weeks, it seemed to experts here inconceivable that troops entering the walled enclave would meet no opposition. Further, in the view of these military experts, it is highly unlikely that two companies of troops would be enough to secure such an area. Newsman Halted

North's Oil Pipeline Hit WASHINGTON, July 25 (Reuters).—Parts of a pipeline installed to bring oil from China to North Vietnam are now in operation and have been attacked by American aircraft, the Defense Department disclosed today. Construction of the pipeline began after the United States mined North Vietnam's ports last May, cutting off oil imports needed to fuel Communist military operations in South Vietnam. A Pentagon spokesman said that pumping stations north of Haiphong had been hit in the past two days by American bombers.

As Walkouts Spread British Official to Seek Jailed Dockers' Release

By Alvin Shuster

LONDON, July 25 (NYT)—Britain approached industrial paralysis tonight as more workers left their jobs and thousands threatened to follow in support of five imprisoned dockers. But there was a glimmer of hope. With unrest spreading across the country, Britain's Official Solicitor, a normally obscure court official, decided to seek the dockers' release, which could bring an end to the crisis. The decision by Norman Turner, the solicitor, came after unofficial strikes shut all major ports, stopped publication of national and local newspapers and disrupted other industries. More workers, including miners, truck drivers and airport workers, walked out today, and London's bus drivers and conductors voted to stop work at midnight for 24 hours. Even a water disruption is threatened on the railroad by locomotive engineers, who will vote later this week on whether to take similar action. The leaders of the Amalgamated Union of Engineering Workers, with 1.5 million members, ordered a protest strike on Monday. And the general council of the Trades Union Congress representing nine million workers will meet tomorrow to consider picketing for a one-day national walkout.

Harold Wilson

Edward Heath

Operations at London's Heathrow Airport were in turmoil today as ground workers met to call a 24-hour strike beginning at 6 a.m. tomorrow. Officials warned that some flights into London may be canceled, or diverted, though they did not expect the airport to stop all operations.

The decision by Mr. Turner, described as the "legal watchdog" in the High Court system, was a reversal of his position of last Friday, when the five dockers were ordered to jail by the National Industrial Relations Court. He said then that he found no grounds to intervene to prevent the jailing, however, he went to Pentonville Prison in north London, met with the dockers, and announced that he would ask the industrial court tomorrow to release the men. He said that, since Friday, "I have given constant thought whether there was any action I ought properly to take."

changed fiery insults across the aisle. The Tories jeered Mr. Wilson, the former prime minister, when he accused Mr. Heath of waiting "for the fairy queen from the official solicitor's office to wave his wand again." Mr. Heath, who viewed the controversy as a choice between anarchy and the rule of law, heard Labor members call him "coward" and "chicken." One Labor member yelled "Hell Hitler" when Mr. Heath concluded. The target of the Labor attacks was the industrial relations law, even though Mr. Wilson had prepared a similar measure when he was prime minister, but abandoned it in face of trade union objections. Calling the law the "most irrelevant and expensive judicial bauble in history," Mr. Wilson pledged any new Labor government to its repeal. In response, Mr. Heath argued that Labor members were preaching the "doctrine of anarchy." He added: "The court is there and the act is there. You should immediately tell the five dockers that they should obey the law."

Antwerp Boycott ANTWERP, Belgium, July 25 (AP).—Leaders of Antwerp's 12,000 longshoremen today called a boycott today against British ships diverted here from Britain's strike-bound ports. The boycott was announced in a joint statement by the three unions involved after they received a request from the Transport and General Workers Union, which organizes British dockers. Meanwhile, passengers found cross-channel ferries to Britain delayed up to five hours, and air traffic by the Skyways Airline from Ashford, Kent, to Antwerp has been doubled to six flights daily.

In Ecology Controversy Agnew, in Alaska, Declares Oil Pipeline Is 'Vital' to U.S.

By Wallace Turner

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, July 25 (NYT).—Vice-President Agnew outlined yesterday the Republican campaign position on the environment as choosing "progress as a nation" instead of "an end to growth and an end to technological progress." As his forum for this policy speech, Mr. Agnew picked a Republican luncheon in this city where hopes are high that construction of the trans-Alaska pipeline will restore an economy that is now deeply depressed. "This administration vigorously supports the construction of the trans-Alaska pipeline with the least possible delay," he said.

"Every year of delay is prohibitively expensive to the nation and to your state." The pipeline project has been bitterly resisted by environmentalists on the argument that it poses an unparalleled threat to the fragile eco-systems of the tundra of Alaska's North Slope, as well as to the waters of Prince William Sound where the 800-mile-long pipeline would disgorge to fill a tanker fleet. Sen. George McGovern's position has not been established since he became the Democratic nominee for President. But last May, in response to a question from Gov. William Egan, a Democrat, Sen. McGovern said he opposed the construction of the pipeline until further hearings had been held on potential environmental damage. "Here in Alaska, men still deal with nature on a day-to-day basis, and although you live with the kind of natural beauty the rest of us only dream about, you are constantly aware that nature is not necessarily benign," the Vice-President said.

Mrs. McGovern Receives Her 'E' for Effort

CUSTER, S.D., July 25 (AP).—Sen. George McGovern was reading off a list of top staff appointments at a news conference when he came to "my wife effort." Sen. McGovern, the Democratic presidential nominee, was really referring to his wife, Eleanor. "She does deserve to be called effort," Sen. McGovern said yesterday, noting that she would continue to do considerable campaigning.

Arab Leader Loses Eye in Bomb Blast

BEIRUT, July 25 (UPI).—A parcel bomb blew up in the face of Palestinian guerrilla leader Bassam Abou Sharif today and partly blinded him, Palestinian sources said. It was the latest in a wave of bomb attacks against Palestinian leaders in Lebanon. A statement by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, of which the 39-year-old Abou Sharif was an information official, blamed Israeli and Jordanian intelligence for mailing the bomb and vowed reprisals of "revolutionary violence." The PFLP claimed responsibility for the attack by Japanese gunmen at Israel's Lydda Airport in May. Mr. Abou Sharif was rushed to a hospital and underwent surgery for more than four hours. Right Eye Lost The doctor who operated on the guerrilla official said: "There is no danger to his life, but he has lost his right eye completely and there is only a 10 percent chance of saving his left eye."

Father of 8 Convicted Of Hijacking Airliner

LOS ANGELES, July 25 (AP).—Ricardo Chavez-Ortiz, a father of eight children, who hijacked a jetliner last April and then told his troubles to newsmen as he held them at gunpoint, was convicted of air piracy yesterday in U.S. District Court here. The 36-year-old Mexican-American faces a maximum sentence of 20 years. The penalty will be announced later.

Best Pains Hospitalize Johnson: No Indication of 3d Heart Attack

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, July 25 (UPI).—Former President Lyndon B. Johnson entered Brooke General Hospital last night suffering chest pains and nausea. But doctors said there was no indication that he had suffered another heart attack. "It may be several days before any definite conclusions can be drawn about the nature of his present illness," a hospital bulletin said. However, at 10 p.m. (1030 GMT Tuesday) he was comfortable, in excellent spirits and his general condition was quite satisfactory. "There have been no irregularities in the heart rhythm blood pressure." Mr. Johnson, who will be 64 years old on Aug. 27, has had two heart attacks—a severe one in 1955 and a second last April, during a visit to his daughter Lynda and her husband, Charles Robb, in Charlottesville, Va. Mrs. Patrick Nugent, Mr. Johnson's second daughter, Lucie, also hospitalized yesterday. She was admitted to St. Rita's Hospital here last night after complaining of "upper respiratory difficulties." The hospital was conducting tests to determine what kind of infection might be involved. A spokesman said she was hospitalized "more for a diagnostic workup than anything else. She will be here a couple of days."

Inching Toward Citadel

Since then, the government units—their path always softened by concentrated air strikes from American and South Vietnamese jets and by the guns of American ships sitting offshore—have been inching toward the Citadel in the heart of the town. The Citadel's provincial capital can be said to be in South Vietnamese hands. Allied planes have bombed several holes in the Citadel's thick walls, to facilitate the entry of the South Vietnamese forces. The province capital—little more than a country town surrounded by banana groves and scrub jungle—has become extremely important to the Saigon government, because it was the only province capital lost to the North Vietnamese.

280 Strikes Over North

SAIGON, July 25 (AP).—The U.S. Command reported today that U.S. forces carried out more than 280 strikes against supply lines, storage depots, trucks and other targets inside North Vietnam yesterday. The key strikes were against the 100-mile north-east rail line connecting Hanoi with China.

Ellsberg Lawyers 'Bugged,' Trial Delayed

By Sanford J. Ungar

LOS ANGELES, July 25 (WP).—The Pentagon papers trial burst into an uproar yesterday when it was revealed that the U.S. government had, during the course of wiretapping directed against someone else, overheard the conversations of lawyers or consultants for the defense of Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo. Defense attorneys, accusing government prosecutors of had been overheard, except as may hereafter be disclosed to the court. It was specified that the disclosure to the court would be made in secret. Since the public affidavit was filed at 4 p.m. Friday and the clerk's office in federal court here closed for the weekend at 5 p.m., "hereafter" was apparently within that hour. The defense contended that the surveillance activated a 1969 Supreme Court decision that attorneys for criminal defendants are entitled to see actual logs of wiretapping to make their own determination of whether the information could prejudice the trial. Whether that case applies here was unclear. But Judge Byrne, in an action that the prosecution has labeled unjustified, granted a defense motion to require disclosure by the government of any surveillance of attorneys and consultants since they became involved in the Pentagon papers case, in which Mr. Ellsberg and Mr. Russo are charged with conspiracy, theft and espionage over publication of a secret government study of the Vietnam war. The wiretapping was revealed in court yesterday when Judge

Uprior in Courtroom

Byrne remarked that he had seen the prosecution's "in camera" (secret) filing on the subject over the weekend. Mr. Russo's chief counsel, Leonard Weinglass, was aghast at the revelation. "Turning momentarily pale, he told the judge that this was 'an incredible development' which required that the trial be halted entirely until the defense learned more about the nature of the surveillance and until a hearing could be held to determine its effect on the case. Mr. Ellsberg's chief counsel, Leonard Boudin, seething with anger, rose to declare the government's secret filing "one of the most serious and shocking and shameful episodes in this entire case."

Experts Foresee Draw With Fischer

Spassky Rallies in Seventh Game

REYKJAVIK, July 25 (UPI)—Champion Boris Spassky played past his regulation time to study the chessboard for 42 minutes tonight, and then adjourned the seventh game of his world title match against Bobby Fischer.

Fischer held a pawn advantage at adjournment but most experts, including international grand masters, said the game appeared headed for a draw.

The American challenger, who arrived four minutes late for today's game and once again barred television cameras from filming it, held a one-point advantage in the 24-game, $250,000 championship tourney.

Each game victory worth a point, Fischer had 35 points, Spassky 25. One game ended in a draw.

Fischer, who opted for the Najdorf variation defense, with the Argentine grand master who invented it in the crowd, moved his king out of check on his 40th move.

Spassky sat back in the new black leather swivel chair, just like Fischer's, which the Icelandic organizers gave him, and rocked gently—studying the board. He had five minutes left on his clock.

The match rules are that each player must complete 40 moves in two and a half hours and 18 moves in every hour thereafter.

Thus, Spassky's 41st move already has cost him most of his allotted time for making 15 more possible moves tomorrow.

The crowd filed into the hall from the cafeteria and corridors and for 45 minutes watched in complete silence as the Russian pondered the chessboard. Only an occasional cough or whisper broke the stillness.

Four or five times Spassky leaned forward as if to make his 41st move, but each time leaned back in his chair.

Fischer also sat over the table for a time but then leaned back in his chair and tapped his foot on the wooden floor.

When the five hours allotted for the day's play had elapsed, referee Lotmar Schmid placed a piece of paper at Spassky's side for the Russian to write his 41st move, but the world champion's eyes never strayed from the board. A few minutes later, he looked at the paper and took it up as though to write on it, but then put it back down again.

Finally, Spassky took up the paper and walked to a side table to write down his move. Then he changed his mind and walked backstage to seal his next move in absolute privacy.

The game began quickly with Spassky opening his king's pawn in variation from the queen's pawn he has used throughout the match against Fischer.

Fischer, coming straight from a couple of sets of indoor tennis, arrived four minutes late and immediately set up a Sicilian defense.

Spassky had left the stage and was not present when Fischer arrived. The Russian world champion strode back after Fischer's opening response of his queen's bishop pawn. The two shook hands and sat down.

Spassky swiveled in his new chair from side to side.

Fischer got up and went to Schmid to make a verbal protest. The complaint concerned the chess board. He told Schmid that the colors on this board did not match properly.

The arbiter took up a letter and read something from it to Fischer.

The challenger returned to his seat.

The game was being played on a plain wooden board to fulfill Fischer's demand that the chessboard be changed. The challenger had complained in waiting previously that a special marble board made by Icelandic artisans for the world championship had uneven lines which bothered his concentration. Spassky agreed to change boards to suit Fischer.

Cairo Charges Israeli Plane Was Testing Egypt Defenses

CAIRO, July 25 (UPI)—An Israeli attempt to violate Egyptian air space over the Suez Canal yesterday was aimed at testing the alertness of Egyptian troops following the withdrawal of Soviet military advisers, the semi-official Al Ahram newspaper said today.

The Egyptian high command, however, had anticipated the Israeli attempt and Egyptian front-line positions brought down one of four intruding Phantom fighter-bombers with missiles, the newspaper added.

The canal incident, the first of its kind in more than a month, took place less than an hour after President Anwar Sadat vowed to fight Israel again, with or without Soviet help.

But political sources said no special instructions went out to canal forces, since they have been on full alert for several months.

The newspaper said, "It is no secret that the high command had anticipated such attempts. When our air defense units foiled the infiltration and shot down one of the intruding planes it was affirmed that the men were indeed worthy of the confidence of the high command."

Jane Fonda Asserts 7 POW Want Votes for McGovern

PARIS, July 24 (AP)—Jane Fonda, back from Hanoi, said today a group of American war prisoners asked her to tell their parents and friends to work for the victory of Sen. George McGovern, D. S.D., because "they fear if Nixon stays in office they will be prisoners forever."

The actress said at a news conference that seven prisoners she met gave her messages for scores of people, including a woman who works in an Orange County, Calif., supermarket, urging them to defeat President Nixon.

The prisoners, wearing purple and red striped uniforms, were shown in a silent color film Miss Fonda made during her North Vietnam visit July 8-22. The rest of the film, emphasizing what the actress considers to be deliberate American attacks on the North Vietnamese dike system, showed her in black Viet Cong pajamas, pants and a black T-shirt touring paddy fields, wading through bomb ruins and, with a helmet strapped around her neck, peering out to the horizon.

Miss Fonda did not take to out of North Vietnam the longest-serving POWs, but she said she had been in Hanoi since 1965, most recent since last month.

"They assured me they would health," she said, "asked them if they were washed they all laughed. 'Without exception, it pressed shame at what I'd done. They also expressed that if Richard Nixon remained in power they'll remain in Hanoi.'"

JERUSALEM, July 25 (UPI)—Israel and Jordan are said to be close to a de facto understanding to enable goods to and from Jordan to be loaded and unloaded in the port of Gaza, which has been occupied by Israel since the six-day war of 1967.

No cargo for Jordan has been unloaded in Gaza, but it was learned from local sources that preparations are being made for the use of the port for Jordan-bound goods. The Israelis, who say that they have at all times offered their ports for Jordanian use, will not even insist on a formal agreement.

Agleton Was in Hospitals for 'Fatigue' or 'Fatigue'

Closes 3 Stays Between '60 and '66

WATER, N.D., July 25 (AP)—Senator James P. Agleton, 42, today disclosed that he was voluntarily hospitalized three times between 1960 and 1966, but that since then he has enjoyed "good, sound, solid sleep."

When George McGovern, of South Dakota, the Democratic presidential nominee, said he had not known about the hospitalizations, Agleton said he was "very satisfied by his explanation." Sen. McGovern, accompanied by Sen. Agleton's "good friend," Sen. Agleton, "good friend" in seeking medical aid he needed it.

Agleton, 42, outlined his history after a morning session with Sen. McGovern at his vacation retreat in the hills of South Dakota, where the American people notified to the full story rumors throughout his about his health.

"Hard-Working Man" three occasions in my life, voluntarily gone into hospital for serious exhaustion and "fatigue." The most recent was in September, 1966, he said the hospitalizations were from his being "a rather hard-working man."

But these incidents, he said, "I paced myself a great deal" of the hospitalizations, of about one month in Barnes Hospital in St. Louis in December, 1960, and a second of about three at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., in September, 1961, included counseling from a psychiatrist, including electric treatment and sleeping pills.

Agleton said he had no physical examination Friday from a Senate physician and yesterday in Bethesda, complete results are due in the week but Sen. Agleton said the doctor told him, two pounds overweight and half a hemorrhoid.

Take It Easier said that it took these excursions to enable him to learn to take it a little easier and intends in the forthcoming election "to give it all that I can on a measured basis."

Answer to a question, Sen. Agleton said, "Alcohol was not involved in any way, shape or form whatever." He added, however, that what he called "reports of an Agleton problem have surfaced in the past."

McGovern said when he and Sen. Agleton to be his riding mate 12 days ago, "I did if there were any problems in the past that he thought" it caused serious problems, he said.

McGovern said when he and Sen. Agleton to be his riding mate 12 days ago, "I did if there were any problems in the past that he thought" it caused serious problems, he said.

A COOL RECEPTION—Residents of Queens in New York City surge forward in attempt to buy blocks of dry ice during power failure affecting 215,000 persons in New York area Monday. The few lucky people able to get the ice had to pay $8 for a block. Emergency was caused by failure of seven of 12 feeder cables in Brooklyn substation.

Power Restored to 2 N.Y. Boroughs After 16-Hour Break

NEW YORK, July 25 (AP)—The power went back on early today for most of the estimated 500,000 residents of Brooklyn and Queens who had been without electricity for up to 16 hours after seven feeder cables burned out.

The restoration of power to most of Brooklyn and Queens marked the end of the second widespread power blackout due to failing Consolidated Edison Co. feeder lines since the current heat wave began 10 days ago. The latest power loss, which began yesterday morning, caused Aqueduct Race Track to shut down for the day and allowed about 40 million gallons of raw sewage to flow through the powerless Jamaica treatment plant into Jamaica Bay.

The water supply was cut off or interrupted for about 20,000 Queens residents and all criminal courts in Queens were blacked out. Some arrangements were held in courtrooms with adequate sunlight. One court session was held by flashlight. A Con Edison spokesman attributed the feeder cable malfunctions to the heat and heavy rains. However, Milton Muscovitz, the city's municipal services administrator, said, "We're not satisfied with Con Edison's explanation. The city of New York cannot continue under a system where we take these kinds of risks and have these kinds of problems."

Syphilis Testing Begun in '32 Denied 200 Blacks Treatment

WASHINGTON, July 25 (AP)—During a 40-year federal experiment, a group of syphilis victims was denied proper medical treatment for their disease. Some participants died as a result, but survivors now are getting what- ever aid is possible, the U.S. Public Health Service says.

The experiment, conducted by the PHS, was designed to determine through autopsies what damage untreated syphilis does to the human body.

Of about 600 Alabama black men who originally took part in the study, 300 or so were allowed to suffer the disease and its side effects without treatment, even after penicillin was discovered as a cure for syphilis. Treatment then probably could have saved or helped many of the experiment participants, PHS officials say.

They contend that survivors of the experiment are now too old to treat for syphilis but add that PHS doctors are giving the men thorough physical examinations every two years and are treating them for whatever other ailments and diseases they have developed.

Shock in Congress Members of the U.S. Congress reacted with shock to disclosure today by the Associated Press that the PHS syphilis experiments on human guinea pigs had taken place.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., a member of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee which oversees PHS budgets, called the study "a moral and ethical nightmare."

"It's incredible to me that such a thing could ever have happened," he said in a statement. "The Congress should give careful consideration to compensating the families of these men."

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Health subcommittee, said through a committee spokesman that he deplores the facts of the case and is concerned about whether any other such experiments exist.

High Disease Rate The syphilis experiment, called the Tuskegee study, began in 1932 in Tuskegee, Ala., an area which had the highest syphilis rate in the nation at that time.

When the study began, the discovery of penicillin as a cure for syphilis was still 10 years away and the drug was not to be generally available for 15 years. Treatment in the 1930s consisted primarily of doses of arsenic and mercury. Of the 600 original participants in the study, one third showed no signs of having syphilis; the others had the disease. According to PHS data, half the men with syphilis were given the arsenic-mercury treatment, but the other half, about 200, received no treatment for syphilis at all.

PHS Premises Men were persuaded to participate by promises of free transportation to and from hospital, free hot lunches, free medical treatment for ailments other than syphilis and free burial. Seventy-four of the untreated syphilis victims were still alive last January.

Syphilis is a highly contagious infection spread through sexual contact. If left untreated, it can cause blindness, deafness, deterioration of bones, teeth and the central nervous system, insanity, heart disease and death.

Records Reviewed In 1969, the PHS Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, which has been in charge of the Tuskegee study, reviewed records of 378 syphilis victims, both treated and untreated, who participated in the experiment. It found that seven men had died as a direct result of syphilis, 154 died of heart failure. But CDC officials say that they cannot determine how many of those deaths were caused by syphilis or how many additional deaths may have been linked to the disease.

PHS officials responsible for initiating the Tuskegee study have since retired and current PHS officials said initially they did not know their identity.

But later, a PHS official said the study was initiated in 1932 by Dr. J. R. Heller, assistant surgeon-general in the service's Venereal Disease Section, who subsequently became division chief.

Of the decision not to give penicillin to the untreated syphilis victims once it became widely available, the official, Dr. J.D. Miller, said:

"Logical Candidate" "I doubt that it was a one-man decision. These things seldom are. Whoever was director of the VD section at that time, in 1946 or 1947, would be the most logical candidate if you had to pin it down."

Dr. Miller, current chief of the venereal disease branch of the CDC, said he did not know who headed the VD section in those years.

Earlier, Dr. Miller had said that "the study began when attitudes were much different on treatment and experimentation. At this point in time, with our current knowledge of treatment of the disease and the revolutionary change in approach to human experimentation, I don't believe the program would be undertaken."

More Protests On French Tests PARIS, July 25 (Reuters).—New Zealand has notified the French government that three New Zealand protest vessels are heading for the French nuclear testing site in the South Pacific, the New Zealand Embassy here said today.

Embassy officials said they had informed the French Foreign Ministry 10 days ago and the French ambassador in Wellington had also been notified. The three ships were named as the Boy Roel, the Magic Isle and the Tazuma.

The Picture Is Changing

French Seize Two More Narcotics Mills

By Flora Lewis

PARIS, July 25 (NYT).—A spurt in arrests of heroin manufacturers and dealers in France has produced a new picture of the European side of the American drug trade. And it doesn't quite fit the film version of "The French Connection."

Tom Murphy, an American Embassy official who devotes most of his time to the campaign against heroin, no longer believes that two or three "families" dominate the traffic in the style of the American Mafia.

"We believed in the stories that tied it all to the Crinis and Vamburis," two Marseilles-based families of Corsican background, Mr. Murphy said in an interview. "But now that we have better intelligence, we are getting good intelligence, we no longer see any role for a Mafia Big."

The pattern we see is more that of a succession of small-scale entrepreneurs who drift in and out of deals with each other. They are frantically scrambling to raise money.

Mr. Murphy said this did not guarantee that there wasn't a "Mafia Big"—a kingpin who runs and organizes the traffic—"but if there is, he's a flounderer and we doubt that he's permanently in the business. He's in and out."

Big Dividend Mobilization of French police efforts to intercept heroin traffic has begun to reap an impressive payoff.

Three heroin-processing laboratories were seized in the eight days between July 14 and 21, and according to a news agency report, the persons accused in connection with these three have told police of the location of two more.

The seizure and accompanying arrests produce more information about the techniques and customs of the traffic, and more clues and telltale signs to guide police in further searches.

The finding of the three labs last week, and today's revelation of two more, involved four men, three of them brothers. They were Marcel, 32, Armand, 36, and Louis Long, 40, and Jacques Assouza, 27, all natives of Marseilles with no known previous criminal records or backgrounds.

They ran a family garage, with a government contract to tow away cars broken down on the superhighway between Marseilles and Aix-en-Provence, although Marcel, who seems to have been the leader, calls himself a film producer. The family business wasn't doing very well.

It isn't clear yet how they launched themselves in the heroin trade on the side, but police figures they produced about two tons in the last two years. That works out, at Marseilles export prices, to about $5,000 a month each.

Price Difference A kilogram of pure heroin sells for $10,000 to $15,000 in Marseilles, but the New York wholesale price is about $250,000.

"The money on this side just isn't worth it for our Mafia types," Mr. Murphy said.

The Long brothers and Mr. Assouza were caught by the most prosaic kind of police work, but it was the greatly intensified anti-heroin drive in France that turned what might have been routine arrests into a spectacular coup.

A woman living on the outskirts of Saint-Oy-sur-Mer, between Marseilles and Toulon, became suspicious when she saw four men unloading the contents of a 20-ton truck into a stadium wagon at midnight on July 14, the French national holiday. She called police.

The police found a gun in the glove compartment. The truck appeared to have a cargo of brooms and ordinary drugstore items. But hidden underneath were a number of vats and large pots, which proved to be a heroin laboratory.

A few hundred yards from the truck was an isolated cottage. More lab equipment had already been installed there, and there was a plastic bag holding 15 kilos of pure heroin.

The arrests were made on a Friday night. The following Sunday, the concierge of an apartment building in a suburb of Aix-en-Provence, stamphiled on some sinister tracks in the ditch beside a major highway. Included were a Sten gun, an automatic pistol, a grenade and cartridges. He notified police.

A police investigation led to Eugénie Schiano, Marcel Long's mistress, who lived in a villa he had rented. Nobody was home. The police broke into the house and found signs of a hasty departure—food in the oven, piles

Thais Conduct Two Big Raids

White House Hails Asia Allies on Drugs

By Tim O'Brien

WASHINGTON, July 25 (WP).—The White House said yesterday that the governments of Southeast Asia are making "substantial progress" in stemming the flow of illicit narcotics to the United States.

Rep. Kroyer Jr., the President's deputy assistant for domestic affairs, told reporters that a cabinet-level report citing corruption and indifference in narcotics enforcement by Thailand and South Vietnam is not up to date. He said the report, compiled by officials of the Central Intelligence Agency, the State Department and the Defense Department, was submitted last February, "but in the last four months there has been substantial progress."

A few hours later, however, Sen. Vance Hartke, D., Ind., introduced legislation in Congress that would forbid further economic and military aid to Thailand "because of its major role in the international narcotics traffic."

Sen. Hartke criticized President Nixon for failing to get earlier in withdrawing U.S. aid to Thailand, "in the face of hard evidence that Thailand serves as the conduit for the transshipment of opium produced in Southeast Asia, the largest opium-growing area in the world."

"Can Stem Tide" Recently published accounts of the pessimistic study of Southeast Asian drug traffic said that the governments of the region were unable and sometimes unwilling to stop the flow of opium and other narcotics.

But Mr. Kroyer argued that the tide "can be stemmed in Southeast Asia." He cited increased seizures of heroin "and other substances" in the region and said the problem was being approached in an atmosphere of "mutual cooperation."

In Vietnam, Mr. Kroyer said, the United States has received "substantial cooperation from President Thieu on down."

The State Department joined the White House in seeking to play down reports of Southeast Asian governments' failure to crack down on narcotics smuggling. Spokesman Charles Bray also said progress had been made since the report was filed in February.

Meanwhile, the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs announced that U.S. agents and Thai police seized about $30 million worth of opium, morphine and heroin in two days of raids in northern Thailand.

According to the bureau's director, John Ingersoll, the raids netted three tons of narcotics, along with guns and other equipment.

Six Men Arrested Six men were seized in a raid yesterday.

The raids were conducted in the early-morning hours of Sunday and yesterday near Mae Sai, a town on Thailand's border with Burma, 530 miles north of Bangkok. Mae Sai is in the region known as the Golden Triangle, where Laos, Thailand and Burma come together, a region suspected of being the site of many drug-processing laboratories.

In the Sunday raid, authorities seized 149.4 pounds of raw opium, several rifles and a grenade launcher. In yesterday's swoop, they confiscated 4,818 pounds of raw opium, 466.4 pounds of morphine base, 786.9 pounds of heroin prepared for smoking and 15.4 pounds of white heroin, plus five guns and two vehicles used for smuggling the dope.

Mr. Ingersoll estimated the U.S. street value of the seized narcotics as $136.8 million for the opium, $91.3 million for the morphine and $3 million for the heroin.

He said U.S. agents have been working with a special Thai task force in a crackdown on narcotics processors and smugglers since March. In a raid a month ago, 3,740 pounds of opium were seized.

"Can Handle Job" Nelson Gross, chief narcotics-drive coordinator for Secretary of State William P. Rogers, said of the two-day haul: "As far as we know, it is the biggest seizure ever in Thailand." He praised the Thai task force, saying: "They have now proved they can handle the job."

Yesterday morning, federal drug law enforcers told Mr. Nixon that the U.S. Bureau of Customs and the Narcotics Bureau helped remove more than 470,000 pounds of narcotics "from world illicit traffic" in fiscal year 1972, which ended June 30. This, they said in their year-end report, was more than double the amount confiscated in this country in fiscal 1971.

About 94 percent of the seized narcotics was marijuana. The Nixon administration said arrests of suspected narcotics dealers rose from 12,497 in fiscal 1971 to more than 15,000 during fiscal year 1972. It was reported that the number of heroin addicts seeking cures with methadone treatment has also increased dramatically, though no numbers were cited.

Lance Reventlow, 37, Dies With 3 Others in Plane Crash

ASPEN, Colo., July 25 (AP).—Lance Reventlow, 37, a former auto racing driver and son of Woolworth heiress Barbara Hutton, was killed in a plane crash last evening, the sheriff's office reported today.

Three others, all Aspen residents, were killed when a Cessna-206, a single-engine craft, went down in a box canyon during a thunderstorm about 10 miles east of this mountain resort town, the sheriff's office said.

Mr. Reventlow had maintained a home here the past six years and taught skiing the last three seasons.

A spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration said the plane left the Aspen airport at 5:30 p.m. EDT yesterday and apparently crashed on a return flight.

The FAA spokesman said the wreckage was found shortly before dawn after an Aspen-bound pilot heard a locator beacon, a device which emits radio signals from downed aircraft.

A helicopter was sent to the site, the FAA said, and searchers discovered the four bodies, which were recovered this morning.

The FAA identified the other victims as Gifford Hooker, 29, Robert Wolf, and Barbara Baker, all of Aspen.

Mr. Reventlow was the son of Miss Hutton's second husband, Danish Count Kurt Haugwitz-Reventlow. His mother was married seven times.

Mr. Reventlow won international fame in the late 1960s as a daredevil race-car driver and won numerous trophies with his Scarab racing car.

He married actress Jill St. John in 1969 and they were divorced in 1964. The following year he married movie starlet Cheryl Holdridge. His mother gave them a $500,000 home as a wedding gift.

Mr. Reventlow became less active in racing after his marriage to Miss Holdridge. He turned to polo, then skiing.

Mr. Reventlow was born in London and at 21 he had the choice of becoming a U.S., British or Danish citizen. He chose U.S. citizenship.

Mr. Reventlow's childhood was stormy as he was the object of a tug-of-war between his parents. He was made a ward of an English Chancery Court in 1938 and could not be taken out of its jurisdiction without its consent until he came of age, thus frustrating the count's wish to have his son become a Danish nobleman.

Miss Hutton and the count were divorced in March, 1941. Count Haugwitz-Reventlow died in 1969.

Challenge to Provisionals British Troops Enter IRA Redo

BELFAST, July 25 (UPI).—British troops keeping up pressure on Irish Republican Army Provisionals today entered the Londonderry "no go" Creggan area and swept Belfast Roman Catholic districts for suspects and weapons.

While the military was acting, Secretary of State William Whitely—the man who ordered the army's "get-tough" policy—met with politicians of all shades of opinion in a bid to organize an all-party conference on the province's future.

The army said that a patrol found the body of a man, later identified as a Protestant, who had been shot in the head in West Belfast. Residents of the mainly Protestant area said that he had been shot by gunmen firing from the nearby Roman Catholic Lower Falls area.

He was the fourth person to die in the last 24 hours.

An army announcement said that patrols today entered the Creggan area, the main stronghold of the Provisionals in Londonderry, as well as the adjacent Bogside district. The army said resterday that patrols entered the Bogside in the week-end for the 11th time.

No details were given of operations other than there were no incidents.

A security source said that entry by troops into the area was significant. It was the Provisionals' victory.

Political sources said that British secretly armed tank support with bulldozer blade province in what so people to a full-scale of the Creggan and it. There was no comment from the army.

Boris Gaponov, 38, Linguist and Hebraist

TEL AVIV, July 25 (NYT).—Boris Gaponov, 38, a linguistics genius who taught himself Hebrew and won Israel's most coveted literary award while still living in the Soviet Union, died today in a suburb of Tel Aviv.

Mr. Gaponov was awarded the Tchernomsky Prize in 1969 for his extraordinary translation into Hebrew of the 12th-century Georgian classic, "The Man in the Panther's Skin," by Shota Rustaveli.

He was prevented by the Soviet authorities from coming here to accept the prize but, a short time later, was stricken by an incurable illness and permitted to spend his remaining years in Israel.

The publication of his work in Israel created a stir, since the Jewish national revival in the Soviet Union had not yet surfaced in 1969, and the revelation that there were live souls in the embers of Soviet Jewry was exhilarating.

Communist Parents
Mr. Gaponov was born when the Russian revolution was 17 years old. His parents were Communists and considered it disloyal to teach their son Jewish values, which the regime was suppressing.

But Mrs. Gaponov had a father who was a devout Jew. Boris was attached to the old man and learned from him the Hebrew alphabet's grammar and the Bible. The grandfather later left him some classics. Boris studied whatever Hebrew publications he could lay his hands on and he listened religiously to Hebrew radio broadcasts from Jerusalem. In 1964, he wrote to Abraham Shlonsky, the Hebrew poet laureate, requesting a copy of the poet's widely acclaimed Hebrew translation of Pushkin's works. From the style of the Hebrew, Mr. Shlonsky believed that the writer was one of the remnants of the older Jewish culture and he was astonished later to learn that he belonged to the post-revolution generation.

Mr. Romero fought more than 60 opponents in the United States and Mexico before ending his career in 1932.

Mr. Romero became a Chilean national hero on August 20, 1924, when he knocked out Sharkey in Boston in eight rounds. Sharkey won the world heavyweight title eight years later.

Nixon Asks Speed In Allotting U.S. Land for Parks
WASHINGTON, July 25 (AP).—President Nixon told aides today to twist bureaucratic arms to convert more surplus federal land into recreational areas under his "legacy of parks" program.

Waiving a map in his office, he told members of the Federal Property Review Commission that the government owns more than half the land in some Western states and added: "That's ridiculous. We don't need it."

Much of the federal property in the West is public domain land which is leased for livestock grazing. But commission members said later that this category was not covered in the program to turn property over to states and local governments for parks.

"We have not even looked at the question of public domain land," presidential counselor Donald Rumsfeld said.

Of the 780 million acres of land owned by the government, Mr. Rumsfeld said, about 707 million acres are classified as public domain land. The rest is in the category of "acquired land" and this is the property being studied for possible recreational use.

Mr. Nixon said that the government had made a good start in releasing land in 39 states for 144 new parks. But he said that there is a tendency in the bureaucracy to "get a vested interest" in a piece of federal property and to resist turning it over for park use. He said that some bureaucrats' arms should be twisted to accelerate the program.

Tupamaros Slay Uruguay's Chief Of Civil Defense

MONTEVIDEO, July 25 (Reuters).—Uruguay's Tupamaros today machine-gunned to death the chief of the country's civil defense force, Col. Artigas Alvarez, officials said.

The 49-year-old colonel—the highest-ranking military victim yet of the terrorists—was the brother of the commander-in-chief of the combined military and police forces, Gen. Gregorio Alvarez, who is in charge of the government's battle against the Tupamaros.

Col. Alvarez was gunned down at the wheel of his car by two or three men as he left his home in a Montevideo suburb for his office, an official communiqué said. He died soon afterward in a military hospital. He was the father of three sons, two of them also soldiers.

It was the first outbreak of Tupamaros violence since late May and June when they killed seven soldiers and a policeman and wounded several officers.

Soviet Thrust

Analysts Believe China Shining A-Arms Program

By William Beecher

STON, July 25 (NYT).—American analysts believe China is rapidly building a special aircraft carrier, a major Soviet jet across the border up a nuclear defense should fall.

It appears to be under way, basing this assessment on the following:

Ex-Aide to CDU

July 25 (UPI).—Chancellor's Social Democrat suffered a setback to former state secretary of opposition Christian Union.

But, in a series of interviews, well-placed sources at the Bundestag and other agencies said that they were convinced that when taken together, these events showed that Peking had decided that the unrelenting Soviet build-up of large-scale conventional and nuclear-war forces along the border was so menacing as to require a fundamental shift in China's military and diplomatic strategy.

The focus on small tactical nuclear weapons in the last few years suggests to some officials that Peking is more eager to come up with a quick counter to what it perceives as the immediate menace represented by the Soviet border buildup, than concentrating now on warheads for its missiles.

by a tactical fighter-bomber of Chinese design, known in the West as the F-9.

China is now mass-producing the F-9 at a rate of about 15 a month. Of the 300 produced during the last two years, at least 200 already have been placed in operational squadrons.

China seems to be abandoning its old defensive concept of deploying primarily poorly equipped militia and paramilitary units along the border to draw Soviet divisions deep into Chinese territory before attempting to engage them with regular troops to the front and guerrilla units to the rear.

Instead, the analysts say, China recently has been moving several first-line army divisions and air force squadrons to forward positions, suggesting an intent to seriously challenge any Soviet advance at an early stage, before it could penetrate deep into industrial Manchuria, for example.

These developments, viewed separately, had evoked mild interest on the part of government officials concerned with China.

Fundamental Shift
But, in a series of interviews, well-placed sources at the Bundestag and other agencies said that they were convinced that when taken together, these events showed that Peking had decided that the unrelenting Soviet build-up of large-scale conventional and nuclear-war forces along the border was so menacing as to require a fundamental shift in China's military and diplomatic strategy.

The focus on small tactical nuclear weapons in the last few years suggests to some officials that Peking is more eager to come up with a quick counter to what it perceives as the immediate menace represented by the Soviet border buildup, than concentrating now on warheads for its missiles.

China now is believed to have deployed a total of 15 to 30 600-mile medium-range missiles and 5 to 15 1,500-mile intermediate-range missiles. Its first 4,000 to 6,000-mile intermediate-range missile, apparently has not yet been test-fired at full range.

It will be several years at best before Peking will have enough ICBMs to threaten seriously the 100 defensive missiles the Soviet Union is permitted to deploy around Moscow under its arms limitation agreement with the United States. Thus deterrence must be based more immediately on other forces.

Vulnerable Capability

China's small force of missiles and Tu-16 bombers could destroy cities such as Vladivostok in Soviet Asia, in retaliation for a first strike by the Russians, but analysts suggest that Peking may not be sanguine about deterring Soviet leaders with so limited a capability, particularly when most of the missiles and bombers are vulnerable to surprise attacks.

Large numbers of tactical nuclear weapons that can be used on the battlefield are another matter. Analysts point out that the Soviet Union now has at least 45 ground divisions along the Chinese-Soviet border, representing about one quarter of its army. Some contend that several more divisions, at less than full strength, are in reserve nearby.

Such units must be supplied by a single, vulnerable rail line, the Trans-Siberian Railroad, and by air transport.

To punch through defenses set up by regular Chinese divisions, the Russians would have to concentrate their tanks, artillery and troops, presenting relatively easy targets for tactical nuclear weapons. The F-9 is believed to have an operational radius of about 800 miles.

Besides the F-9 fighter-bomber, the Chinese are reported to be building more than 300 MIG-19 jet fighters a year and possibly a small number of MIG-21s. These might be used to provide fighter cover for F-9s carrying nuclear weapons.

Army to Probe Racism Clash
At German Base
LUDWIGSBURG, West Germany, July 25 (AP).—The U.S. Army said today it has appointed three officers to investigate a race riot here that left 26 soldiers injured, two of them in the hospital.

A VII Corps statement said, "Tension erupted into fighting between blacks and whites at Krabbenloch Kaserne Saturday evening about 3 p.m. when rumors spread that blacks were taking control of the post."

About 20 white soldiers went to an enlisted men's club, where they and a group of black soldiers who were in the club clashed for about 20 minutes, the statement said.

It added that "the whites then left the club and a group of about 30 blacks went into the 34th Signal Battalion billets area where they assaulted white soldiers and broke some windows."

Sudan and U.S. Ties Are Resumed

WASHINGTON, July 25 (AP).

Sudan and the United States resumed diplomatic relations today after a five-year break, the State Department announced, and an exchange of ambassadors will take place in the near future.

The Sudanese government of President Gaafar Numeiri announced last Wednesday its decision to resume ties with Washington.

Abdel Aziz Hamza, the top Sudanese diplomat in Washington, met Secretary of State William F. Rogers yesterday to convey officially the decision.

Sudan is the second Arab country to restore relations with the United States this month. The Red Sea state of Yemen resumed relations July 1.

Kenyan Asks UN to Probe 'Slave Trade'

Smuggling of Africans Seen as Vast Racket

GENEVA, July 25 (UPI).—The United Nations Economic and Social Council was asked today to investigate the illegal traffic in African labor between Europe and Africa.

Odero Jowi of Kenya told the council that Africans are being lured to Europe with promises of good jobs at high pay.

"Once they set foot on European soil, these African laborers find themselves in actual slavery, are transported in containers like commodities and are left entirely at the mercy of the racketeers," he said.

Mr. Jowi said that the traffic "has been going on for some time" and mostly involves North Africans and citizens of Mali who are brought into France and Italy.

He said that the council should make a full investigation to enable governments to take action.

Paid to Be Smuggled

ROME, July 25 (Reuters).—Fifty-nine Africans who tried to emigrate illegally to France earlier this month have told police investigators here that they had to pay about $150 each for clandestine transportation across the French frontier.

They went packed in a sealed truck equipped with a large oxygen cylinder to keep them alive during the long road journey from Alexandria in northern Italy to Paris, they added.

They told police that they had been responsible for paying their air, ship and rail fares from their countries to Alexandria by way of Tunis, Palermo and Rome.

Allende Blames U.S. Pressure For Economic Woes of Chile

SANTIAGO, July 25 (Reuters).—Marxist President Salvador Allende last night accused the United States of imposing a virtual economic blockade of Chile and said this was a major cause of the country's economic ills.

He also warned Chileans that further sacrifices will be necessary to "defend the interests of the workers."

Mr. Allende, in a nationwide television and radio broadcast, spoke at a time of galloping inflation and a critical shortage of hard currency.

He said his leftist coalition government would act to encourage savings in state-controlled banks and speed what he called "the capture of liquid funds held by private individuals."

Price Adjustments

He promised that from Oct. 1 prices would be readjusted "to discriminate in such a way that higher income groups will contribute more to the development of the country," but did not amplify this.

He explained his economic blockade remark by saying that lines of credit advanced to Chile by the United States stood at $220 million in August 1970—just before he took office—and had fallen to $33 million in June this year.

He also said his government had encountered difficulties in obtaining credits from international organizations "to which we have a right because we are members."

He did not mention any specific organization, but insisted that Chile was losing out because several of its proposals had been rejected even though there was "no objection of a technical kind."

He said Chile's difficulties had been partly compensated for by the assistance of socialist countries.

The difficulties and problems would be met realistically, he added, "without hiding the fact that sacrifices will be necessary..."

to defend above all the interests of the workers."

He said, "The pressure of foreign capital is putting to the test the internal cohesion of our people and our capacity to respond with dignity and honor."

He appealed to workers to apply themselves to their jobs with firmness, "because they will be the real beneficiaries of our new economic structure."

Observers said Mr. Allende's speech was his frankest admission so far that his government's effort to turn Chile into a fully socialist society by democratic means has run into grave economic problems.

Finnish Leader To Seek To Form New Coalition

HELSINKI, July 25 (UPI).—President Urho K. Kekkonen today asked Johannes Virolainen, Center party leader, to investigate the chances of forming a majority government.

The Social Democratic minority cabinet under Premier Rafael Paasio resigned last week so that a broader government could be created.

The two main issues that forced the government's resignation were Finland's pending approval of the terms offered for a free trade agreement with the European Economic Community and the budget for the next fiscal year.

Mr. Virolainen said that he hoped to report back to Mr. Kekkonen within a few days. "But the president gave me a week to carry out the sounding," he said.

The Social Democrats said yesterday that they preferred that the coalition negotiator be chosen from the Center party, the biggest non-Socialist party in Finland.

Four Liberals Sentenced In Prague

Leaflet Distribution Basis of Charges

PRAGUE, July 25 (Reuters).—Four persons received sentences of up to 15 months from a Prague city court today on charges of anti-government activity.

The Rev. Jaromir Dus, an evangelical pastor, was sent to prison for 15 months on charges of subversion.

Dr. Ladislav Hejzlanek, a historian, was sentenced to nine months in prison, charged with incitement, and his wife received a suspended sentence of six months on the same charges.

Jiri Jirasek, a lawyer, formerly of the Encyclopedic Institute of the Prague Academy of Sciences, also got a suspended sentence of six months for incitement.

It was the fourth trial of liberals to end in Prague city courts within the last eight days. Like most of the 12 accused found guilty and sentenced last week, the four defendants today were alleged to have helped disseminate clandestine leaflets just before last November's parliamentary elections.

Two of the sentences were higher than demanded by the prosecutor.

Western reporters were barred from the courtroom, as they were for last week's trials, and only a few close relatives were allowed in.

All four generally admitted that they were involved in the leaflets affair, but denied that their activities were against the law, the sources said.

The leaflets, of which an estimated 72,000 were distributed, reminded citizens of their constitutional voting rights, such as crossing names off the printed ballot paper, writing new ones in, or refusing to vote altogether.

'The Rule of Law'

Britain's fast-spreading labor unrest sprang from difficulties over technological innovation but it is more and more becoming a strike against the law. This is no new thing in the history of organized labor. Its early strikes—yes, its very organization—were delivered in the teeth of common law and statutes against combinations and conspiracies. But what labor was forced to do when it was weak and what labor does now when it is powerful are not necessarily the same in terms of social values.

The British strikes began with friction between the truckers and the dockers over who was to handle the containerized cargoes of today, and how. This problem afflicts American ports as well, although progress has been made in solving it. But out of that dispute in Britain—essentially one between two segments of a single union—came the sentencing of five men for contempt of the new national industrial court, established under legislation passed by the Conservative majority against strong opposition from the unions. This touched off a wave of strikes, directed against the law, rather than the economic questions involved in containerization.

When the five were sentenced, Sir John Donaldson, president of the industrial relations court, said that men could not pick and choose among the laws they would obey; they could not depend on it for the protection of their homes and families and then defy it when it obstructed their objectives. "Our whole way of life," said Sir John, "is based upon the acceptance of the rule of law."

But to this the unions might reply that their way of life began with opposition to the law, and their chief weapon, the strike, is an exertion of naked economic power. This is quite true, just as lockouts, and the assertion by management of its prerogative to pay wages and impose working conditions and hours suitable to itself was an expression of stark economic realities—as management saw them.

Much has been done to limit the prerogatives of management, in most Western countries. But the evolution of industrial law in the broad sense, which would permit issues to be argued out and settled in court, rather than fought out on the picket line, is far from a reality. Both management and labor fear the courts; both are reluctant to turn over authority—which could determine union survival, company survival, the bread and butter of workers and the dividends of stockholders—to any extraneous body. Nor, as the recent coal strikes in Britain proved, does the fact that an industry may be nationalized make any real difference.

Yet the community does have an acute interest in the preservation of a reasonable degree of continuous production. When the king's officers enforced the king's peace on warring barons or the outlaws of the highway, it served the common good by keeping the crops sown and trade alive. It infringed upon the pretensions of local lords, no less than it inhibited the crimes of mere brigands. But it was essential for the growth and prosperity of a nation. Somehow, the same must be accomplished as against the lordship of labor and capital, whether the capital be owned by the state or by individuals, whether the labor be organized or unorganized, whether their aims be predatory or principled.

Egyptian Belligerence

President Sadat and Egyptian missile crews have already undermined hope that the announcement of the expulsion of Soviet advisers from Egypt might mark a turn toward rationality and peace in the Middle East.

Although the withdrawal of even a portion of the estimated 10,000 to 20,000 troops that have been stationed in Egypt renders such threats more futile and foolish than ever, Mr. Sadat resorted to the old inflammatory rhetoric of confrontation with Israel in his address to the Arab Socialist Union. Not content with lambasting the Russians for withholding offensive arms, the Egyptian president also attacked and distorted American peace efforts in a manner calculated to discourage further attempts from any quarter to initiate meaningful negotiations. His renewed rejection of direct talks with Israel as the equivalent of "surrender" ignores the recent example of Pakistan, whose President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto journeyed to New Delhi to negotiate—successfully—the withdrawal of Indian troops from Pakistani soil.

President Sadat's militant tone was accentuated by the shooting of missiles at two Israeli planes which the Israelis said were on a "routine flight" over occupied Sinai. It is possible, of course, that Mr. Sadat's unfortunate rhetoric is merely his way of concealing from the Egyptian public the more peaceable intentions hinted at by the Egyptian information minister, Mohammed el-Zayyat; that the breach of the canal cease-fire was a legitimate response to an Israeli provocation, real or imagined. But this ominous combination of Egyptian words and deeds so soon after Sadat's declaration of independence from Soviet restraints suggests that the Kremlin showed remarkably good judgment in allowing itself to be invited out of an untenable situation.

If the Egyptians are really determined to bring down a new catastrophe upon themselves and the entire Middle East, the Russians are well out of it. Indeed, the "over-caution" with which Mr. Sadat has charged his Moscow "friends" may prove to have been the kind of prudent big-power restraint that President Nixon has often preached but so far has failed to practice in Southeast Asia.

Vietnam Talks

If the system of parallel private talks which Washington and Hanoi seem to have initiated this week was intended to revive the Paris conference, moribund since its birth in 1968, let's say off-hand that it's a failure. The six hours which Mr. Kissinger spent somewhere in Paris Wednesday with Messrs. Le Duc Tho and Xuan Thuy apparently had no effect on the official talks. They merely contributed to making the negotiation on Avenue Kléber appear a little more derisive, sterile and close to ridiculous.

—From Le Figaro (Paris).

Ulster, Continued...

Mr. Whitelaw has now made clear to the Catholics the collusion of the London forces with the Protestant majority in Ulster. For the Catholics therefore, any compromising becomes treason, and, in this exasperation of passions and antagonisms, they are going to fully support those of them who protect them with their rifles.

—From L'Aurore (Paris).

Are we going to watch the British Army be compelled to fight on two fronts? To say the truth, it seems indeed that Mr. Whitelaw, "the man of reconciliation" has no other choice any longer than to force reason upon the extremists of both camps.

—From Le Figaro (Paris).

Is the cause of peace imperiled more by the IRA leaders who just indulged in an atrocious outburst of terror and murders in Belfast thereby annihilating every possibility of easing the situation, or by the Protestants who have not finished celebrating their "victory" of 1690 and who are organizing semi-military militias to dictate their own law and perpetuate their excessive domination? ... The only hope is that, in the long run, the moderates of the two sides, fed up with violence and insecurity, will manage to silence the extremists and seek with London and Dublin a way of ending this tragedy of Ireland.

—From Les Echos (Paris).

Heath's Two IRAs

Britain's Conservative government now has two IRA problems to deal with. It inherited the Irish Republican Army, but can only blame itself for the Industrial Relations Act. Prime Minister Heath got plenty of warnings that the act would lead to even more trouble with labor unions. At the time it was passed, TUC official Vic Feather warned that the day the first British worker was jailed under the new act, hell would be let loose. The union bosses spoke in vain. The Conservatives used their majority to force the act through Parliament.

One election promise from the Tories was to create peace in labor relations. This does not mean that the unions passively will accept suppression and a law which means that organized workers are jailed. The class justice which is now tried out by the Conservatives does not belong to a modern democracy.

The Conservative policy in Britain is not revolutionary, but reactionary. Heath is waging a fight with the unions. He himself sowed the wind. Now he has the storm.

—From Arbeiderbladet (Oslo).

Seventy-Five Years Ago

July 25, 1897

PARIS—President McKinley has practically admitted that this country must repudiate silver. In his message asking for the appointment of a Currency Commission, which was sent to Congress yesterday shortly before its adjournment, he commended to the consideration of Congress the report of the Indianapolis convention. Mr. McKinley's thorough endorsement of this report angers his bi-metallic followers.

Fifty Years Ago

July 25, 1922

PARIS—It is announced by the administration that the Note sent to Great Britain, asking aid to halt the smuggling of liquor, was dispatched only after officials here were convinced that it is impossible to stem the flood of liquor from the Bahamas and also direct from England, unless Great Britain aids. One question involved is that of false clearance papers which are held by the rum runners.

Youth, Space and Time in Morocco

By C. L. Sulzberger

RABAT—Unusual interest abroad focuses on the Moroccan election campaign not merely because there is striking difference between certain defense and diplomatic policies as enunciated by President Nixon and Senator McGovern but also because the recent Democratic convention was seen as a dramatic manifestation of a problem concerning most contemporary nations, regardless of ideology. This is the famous generation gap.

In various ways the discontent of youth with its elders has been demonstrated during recent years in the United States, Yugoslavia, Egypt, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, to name but a few. There is an explosion of young people with explosive ideas. It is a social phenomenon that, as a South American saying goes, "In the eyes of our grandparents we are all revolutionaries."

For Morocco, this is a key question because, like many developing lands, it has a disproportionate number of youngsters and, not being heavily industrialized, has difficulty providing the kinds of jobs they want in sufficient quantity. It is estimated that half this country's 17 million people are 21 or younger.

Hassan's View

King Hassan II is clearly concerned with fitting this energetic and enormous mass of youngsters into the country's tenuous social structure. He says: "There will always be a generation gap. The young want space and the old want time." But then he adds:

"Here we have ample opportunities for young people. We lack sufficient cadres in our technical and administrative branches and there is so much to do that any bright youngster can find his chance. You often see a 25-year-old engineer working beside someone twice his age. Many employers are younger than their employees."

The principal problem, he contends, is psychological. If a nation's youth feels out of tune with that nation's society, difficulties begin. Yet he thinks this ultimately easier to face here than in a highly advanced land like the U.S. where youth is so evidently feeling restless.

Morocco, like other undeveloped countries, has immediate room for bright young men when they finish their education. They need not wait for years, feeling frustrated, because an older managerial class is already established and slow to give way. The only thing is to insure that youngsters are not rendered needlessly impatient by "stupidities."

With this in mind, the king emphasizes Islam as a stabilizing force to knit the community together. He thinks this provides the necessary cement. But, in talking of Islam, Hassan makes clear he is speaking of it "as a way of life" and not just as a religious faith.

Holy Position

It is not his intention, he says, to try and get between a man and his creator, to intrude into his prayers. This is his private affair. The king himself has a holy personal position as a direct descendant of the prophet Mohammed.

Indeed, he stresses religious tolerance by acknowledging that, despite fanatical passions that infect some corners of the Moslem world, the two men he has most admired (apart from his late father, King Mohammed V) are Pierre Mendès-France and Léon Blum, both French Jews.

Of Blum, he says: "He was a great upholder of the law, a fine jurist. He spoke for public responsibility to the law and of the relationship of the law to the public. No one with any legal understanding can fail to appreciate his qualities." The king has a low degree himself.

What he means when referring to Islam as "a way of life" is that it can be a steady force because it specifies the rights of an individual but also specifies that an individual has no right to abuse these when that interferes with other members of the community.

"Islam," he says, "is practical—and not only a contemplative religion. It teaches certain social rules of communal behavior and lays down a relationship between the government and those it governs." Hassan's idea is that understanding between differing age groups can be increased if guided by some philosophical conception such as this.

It is an interesting conception but not entirely different from similar approaches both in Catholic or Protestant-dominated states on the one hand and Communist states on the other. In each instance, there seems to be disinterest among the youth with inherited doctrinal ideas.

And, as everywhere, there is impatience here—especially among educated youngsters. Whether Hassan can, in effect, encourage here a kind of Moslem democracy is moot.

Letters

On Jane Fonda

Evidently Mr. S. Maderick (Letters, July 31) has already decided that Jane Fonda is a traitor, which until this moment I thought had to be decided in a court of law. He further states that the U.S. is at war, which until this moment I thought only Congress could decide. Have I somewhere misread our Constitution?

W.E. WAYNE

Vienna.

America: Freedom of assembly and peace marches are clubbed and tear-gassed. Freedom of speech—and Vietnam Veterans Against the War are locked behind bars. Jane Fonda asks servicemen to reflect before dropping bombs that destroy thousands of innocent people and she is accused of treason. It is time to accuse the accusers.

MARGIE GOLDSMITH

Paris.

Jane Fonda has gone too far in stating that President Nixon is a traitor—which one of them gave aid and comfort to the enemy? Mr. Nixon with his untiring efforts to reach a just peace with honor for both sides, or too busy Jane with her visits and smiles and handshakes in North Vietnam?

What is the American government waiting for to recall her passport, or better yet, exile her to Hanoi with an interdiction to set foot in the United States. Freedom of speech is one thing, license to attack one's country is quite another.

ELEANOR PERREAU

Paris.

Kraft From Hanoi

Upon reading Joseph Kraft's first article following his visit to North Vietnam (NYT, July 18), I once again realized that no nation upon this earth could defeat the Vietnamese people's determination to rid themselves of white Westerner whimsies. Mr. Kraft concludes his good article by observing that it was his impression that "the North Vietnamese regime is one of the most Communist of Communist regimes anywhere in the world—tough, resolute, disciplined, organized to the rice rooks and with a missionary belief in revolutionary purpose that absorbs all discussion." Most nations in the white Western world (the Soviet Union included) lack this firm determination to overcome the obstacles which each and every Vietnamese in the North has voluntarily carried upon his/her shoulders.

Bombs no more kill ideas than did the Huns when the Roman empire threw the individual believing Jewish persons to their deaths shortly after the crucifixion of the Messiah of the Jewish people. That handful of revolutionaries could not be whipped. The determination to defeat the enemy, no matter what the cost in self-sacrifice, is all that is necessary for anyone to prove himself in this worst of all possible worlds. It is obvious, therefore, that the continuing disintegration of the United States of America will go on because there is no reason and no revolution and no belief in any purpose until its suicidal tendency ends. The deepening moral crisis McCarthy saw in 1968 has not been solved by the immoral leadership of President Nixon. The inquisitor of Alger

Hiss and the man who was Vice-President during the execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg has added 20,000 more coffins to American cemeteries. We are still faced with the same problem as was Robert Kennedy when he announced his candidature for the presidency. "At stake is not simply the leadership of our party or even our country—it is our right to moral leadership on this planet." Nixon has failed; perhaps (just perhaps) George McGovern will restore America's early "missionary belief in revolutionary purpose."

Mr. Kraft, reporting on his trip to Hanoi, says that he has been unable to have any unorganized contact with the people of that country and tells of his being constantly "guided" by officials. I wonder then how it is possible for him to say that the North Vietnamese people are absolutely united under the present leadership? Where is the evidence? One has to ask some questions when the North Vietnamese have issued total mobilization orders and said that people who don't work will be obliged to do so. This assuredly means that concord and discipline are not as perfect as Mr. Kraft says they are.

Advantage Fischer

An aspect of the unbelievable conduct of Fischer in the World Chess Championship which has not been given due relevance, is that the organizers of the match, while appealing Fischer in the widest whims, are at the same time damaging Spassky, who must be obviously playing under the pressure of repressed feelings, and therefore not at his best. Even the forfeited game must have been more damaging to Spassky than to Fischer.

In a game where concentration is paramount, the organizers are giving Fischer a substantial and unfair advantage.

Do Not Pass Go

Charles H. Smith Jr.'s recollections of the game he "tried to play some 25 years ago in Japan" (Letters, July 18), do indeed fit the game of go, recalled to his memory by my story in the NYT July 11. The board is, as he remembered it, ruled with horizontal and vertical lines, 19 each way, producing 361 intersections. The only move is to place the "black and white buttons" (they are called "stones") on the intersections, where they stay put until the end of the game, except for the few which are taken prisoner and removed.

Since Mr. Smith reports that "go" means "five," I wonder if he played go or go-moku, which uses the same board and men? It had always been my impression that it was the "moku" part of this word that meant five, but my Japanese vocabulary is restricted to sake, soyamara and sushien and I am not going to question the translation of a man who has actually been in Japan. Go-moku is Oriental tic-tac-toe, but with an objective of aligning five men in a horizontal, vertical or diagonal line, instead of three Xs or Os. Playing it on a large board instead of a small diagram permits the game to go

On the Future Of U.S. Policy Toward Israel

By Wm. F. Buckley Jr.

NEW YORK—In 1967, when I read was threatened and a six-day war resulted, prominent American liberals passed their clamor to get us out of the Southeast Asian imbroglio, clamor, in a highly public declaration, for getting us into the Middle East imbroglio, causing Professor John Roche of Brandeis to remark wryly that their manifesto should have been labeled "Doves for War." They got quite sore at Professor Roche, fussily insisting on the distinction between independence for the people of South Vietnam and independence for the people of Israel.

What it came down to was pure and simple that, where Israel is concerned, the cheering-lead-ers-for-a-reticent-American-international-profile do not a John Kenneth Galbraith, a long philosopher of neo-isolationism, confronting the paradox of television in Miami Beach of the McGovern convention, simply and honestly, "I cannot have a special affection for Israel."

Indeed, a lot of us do. Not for reasons of compassion reach into history, ancient, horribly contemporary. But, because there is so much in the behavior of the leaders of modern states of Israel that need to learn from. Israel, ago took the measure of security requirements—and accordingly, the UN census and Israel simply does not do. Interestingly, but not surprisingly, she is not on that account either ostracized or disintegrated (Arab states obviously excepted). Neither was the United States—because it is a conclusion—if we had behaved for instance in Indochina, decisively as Israel. If Gene Dayan had managed our v against Hanoi, that too would have been a six-day war.

Senator McGovern now

voices the contradiction formally, by proposing a to American commitment to Israel's independence alongside an all uniform disparagement of United States commitments to other countries, most particularly South Vietnam. McGovern likes to put to Israel democracy as his justification, but this of course, disingenuous. After all, he quoted as desiring to recognize the "legitimate" government of China while angrily disavowing the government of South Vietnam.

That Special Place

The problem is to reason for the legitimacy of Mao Tse-tung government, on over to the ill-fated President Thieu's. Net mind. Better to be straight forward like Galbraith, and simply that Israel occupies a special place in the American heart.

While you are at it, be even more straightforward than Galbraith. Recognize that on a of that special affection, a U pledge to Israel's independence for the time being necessary to anyone who aspires to be President, for the simple reason that the strategically situated Jewish community is for the most part very generous in backing political causes, and very insistent on the matter of Israel's independence.

Even so, and notwithstanding Senator McGovern's protestations of fidelity to the cause of Israel, many Jewish leaders have confessed their concern. They do so for quite obvious reasons. One of them is that a preceding leader of the Democratic party, Mr. Lyndon B. Johnson, wrote into policy his entire Jewish ancestry and the survival of South Vietnam. So did his coadjutor, Hubert Humphrey. In due course, however, Hubert Humphrey, running for the Presidency, not only renounced the pledge, he went so far as to say that if he were elected President he would not authorize a dollar of military aid for South Vietnam.

As it has gone for South Vietnam among the leadership of the Democratic party, so might it go for Israel. Why not? The fear among prominent Jewish leaders in America, and in Israel, is that the logic of McGovern's foreign policy and his insistence on military retrenchment point to an eventual Vietnamization of all our commitments.

Professor Galbraith's heart is admittedly large, but it is not necessarily co-extensive with the heart of Middle America, and it is just possible that Senator McGovern's glamorous rhetoric about the end of the cold war, and about the necessity to reduce our international commitments, will in due course strike the majority of Americans as a mandate to get the hell out of the Middle East and let Israel worry about her own sovereignty. What holds for Saigon today holds, mutatis mutandis, for Tel Aviv tomorrow.

slow-moving airplane entered the competition, and Irina Arkhipova had the same trouble at the beginning of "Stride is vampa."

Fast Stage

The real nightmare was the conductor's. Reynold Giovanetti is a gifted young opera conductor, but there was not much he could do to hold together soloists and chorus spread out 50 feet and more away on the vast stage. Some of the ensembles dissolved into chaos, while in others the singers and the British chorus—the "Ambrosian" Opera Singers—pulled themselves together admirably. Less understandable were some of Giovanni's extremes of tempo, rushing Caballé through her Act I cabaletta or putting the brakes on so hard that the occasional ensemble all but fell apart.

Yet the magic was there, too. Miss Caballé's singing of "D'amor sull'ali rosee" was Verdi singing of the most exquisite sort, and the resulting acclamation stopped the show for minutes. Miss Arkhipova, the Soviet mezzo who made such a strong impression during the Bolshoi's Paris visit, is too aristocratic an artist to be an idiomatic Azucena, but her refined tone and restrained passion made her a consistent pillar of strength.

Peter Glossop was a powerful Count di Luna, although sometimes his singing was strained, while Ludovic Spiess was a stalwart, un-Italianate Maurizio, and his unerring "Di quella pira" brought forth some noisy rebukes from his auditors. Nicola Zaccaria was an expert Ferrando.

The time and space problems raised some havoc with Charles Hamilton's staging. He tried to compensate for the absence of a curtain by introducing some between-scenes continuity, but it was not very helpful, although the setting-up of a gypsy camp on the open stage provided a good touch. Verdi, unfortunately, did not supply enough marching music to get the armed forces on and off the huge stage in a very orderly way. The result was rather a routine "Trovatore" staging, only more of it. Filippo Sanjust's costumes were handsome and appropriate.

But despite the problems, the feeling persists that staging opera here is what this relatively new festival should and will continue to do. This "Trovatore" was a first try, and an ambitious one, and the problems it exposed are not necessarily insurmountable. The audience exists—apparently an international one that will go halfway around the world for something exciting enough.

Next year, the festival's directors promise Birgit Nilsson in "Tristan und Isolde" with Karl Böhm conducting, and plan an Italian opera—"Semiramide" with Joan Sutherland is a possibility, or Verdi's "Otello"—as well as having hopes of bringing the New York City Ballet over.

Entertainment in New York

NEW YORK, July 25 (UPI)—This is how The New York Times critics rate the new movies:

"The Man," based on Irving Wallace's 1963 novel about the first black President of the United States, stars James Earl Jones as Douglas Dilman, president pro tempore of the U.S. Senate (the Vice-President has had a stroke), who becomes President after the incumbent and the speaker of the House are killed when a ceiling falls on their heads during a summit conference in Germany. "It's an indication of the difficulty I had in relating to 'The Man' that for the rest of the movie, which only exploits ceilings as melodramatic conveniences, I kept wondering what really happened," Vincent Canby writes. "Hadden anyone—the CIA or somebody—checked out the palace? Had the Russians been fiddling around? Did a loo leak? I simply couldn't buy the casual explanation: 'Well, you know those old palaces, Jim.'"

Apart from the story, which Canby says doesn't make much sense, "what is most memorable is the 'supremely dopey dialogue.' On the plus side, however, Mr. Jones 'persists in being an interesting actor no matter what.' Rod Serling wrote the story and screenplay. Joseph Sargent ('The Forbin Project') directed.

"Stand Up and Be Counted," directed by Jackie Cooper, focuses mainly on women's liberation as it affects several families in Denver, according to The Times critic, offering some "pithy, explicit dialogue, a few gags and giggles and fewer constructive answers." "As an examination of current revolution, it erratically skips between comedy and serious causes with somewhat less than impressive impact either way," A.H. Weiler writes. Heading the cast, as a fashion writer sent to cover the lib scene in Denver, her home town, Jacqueline Bisset is "decorative but as unbelievable in the role as her English accent. And her unresolved liaison with Gary Lockwood, as an airline pilot, is not an endorsement of the movement either." However, Lee Purcell, as Miss Bisset's "militant feminist sister who arranges to become pregnant without romance or marriage," and Anne Francine, as their mother, "do have some incisive moments."

Paris Fashions: Courrèges Moves to a Sexier Look

By Eugenia Sheppard

PARIS, July 25.—Courrèges is alive and well and so is his collection, certainly the best thing on the fashion scene here today.

The man who started as a fitter with Balenciaga and made a fortune on his own by dressing women like pampered babies is moving on to a sexier, more adult look than his booties, bonnets and boxy dresses. Though he still keeps his basic concept, signs of the times at his opening this morning were softer music, curvier clothes, hairdos with ribbons and ringlets, many more evening clothes and even a touch of mink.

When the Ump, knuckle look came in, Courrèges was temporarily out of favor, but he's right back on top, at least as far as the Paris women are concerned. His is the summer uniform that the most chic women are wearing around town this week. It's a wraparound linen skirt, piped in white, and worn with a rib-knit, short-sleeved white cotton T-shirt.

In the new collection he follows it up with the same skirt in the gray-flannel look, and the same T-shirt in a heavier version. Though the Courrèges collection gives the impression of more dresses and skirts than pants, they come out about even, it turned out in an after-the-show count. Courrèges is sure that every woman's life nowadays calls for pants, and since they're going to wear them, they might as well be his. The new ones have the same easy-to-wear cut they have always had. They are waist-high, zip up the front and fall straight and wide down the sides.

To cover both pants and skirts he has a new cap sleeve coat that leaves the arms bare for sweaters, battle jackets of wool, vinyl or the two together and a longer, belted jacket worn, as in other houses, over an evening dress. He goes all out for mink in sporty jackets of brown or white mink, and in a luxurious topcoat of orange-dyed mink and leather. He likes orange all through the collection: even to vinyl in an orange and white gingham check, but the two shades he harps on most consistently are ivory, much softer than his usual poster colors, and a candy pink much more definite than his trademark layette pastels.

Courrèges uses silk crepe for the first time. It comes as a real shocker and must have surprised even the designer himself, since it dances onto his stage in only three outfits. One of them is a marvelous looking pair of sky blue evening slacks.

His evening dresses look human for the first time since he started designing. Up to now they have always been more like gag posters than clothes, but this time they are wearable and even pretty, especially the mauve pink satin skirt with a neckline cut to the waist and a top of ruffles.

The sweaters and body stockings are the bread and butter of the Courrèges collection. Alone, they have made him a millionaire. At the opening, his four types of rib knit body stockings with different-length legs and different tops were all shown decorated with the curly Mongolian lamb Courrèges used for coat linings.

pullover on top of a heavier turtle neck.

It's still Halloween in the new Lanvin collection. When else could you possibly wear a medieval page boy's sequin-embroidered tunic? Or a black dress with a ballet dancer's tutu with a white cotton tail?

The new clothes may be fun and games for Lanvin's good-looking boutique on the Faubourg St. Honoré, but they're hard to figure out as a Paris couture collection. If you have a sense of humor about fashion, though, some of the offbeat things designer Jules François Crahay has thought up will simply make you die laughing. Take these just above ankle-length big, plaid pants and the bellhop jackets with the oversize ruffs. You feel like mooring right back at the lifelike cowhide pattern that he has applied in wool on both daytime and evening clothes.

Lanvin has all kinds of evening clothes, laces, chiffons, great wrap-around kimono coats to cover them and the pastel fox boss that are an absolute must for fall.

Platform sole; are all over the Paris collections. They have even caught up with conservative Balmain, where they come as a slight surprise: it's like seeing your mother in a tarty wig.

Balmain likes lots of bright cherry red this season. He uses black and white stripes for contrast all through the collection in hats, shirts, jacket linings or wherever.

Balmain is not so conservative, either, when it comes to those evening necklines on his black velvet and draped mat jersey halternecks. He cuts them way down and farther out than he ever has before.

When I say, "I miss Chanel," it pretty well sums up the new collection designed by Gaston Berthelot. The suits are bigger and looser than Chanel ever made them. The tweeds may be the same, but they lack the brilliance of the shades Chanel used to pick.

Two thirds of the collection are Chanel suits or coats over dresses and here's hoping that plenty of women with no memory for the original look will want to wear them. They're good clothes. The evening clothes were improvised by Berthelot. He revives suffer brocade; and wins first prize in the ruffle contest that the Paris couture seems to be conducting.

So far it hasn't been a rewarding Paris season. In fact, to many of us, it's a great anticlimax to some of the great American ready-to-wear collections on Seventh Avenue last May.

BLONDIE

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

The problem here was how to play six spades after a diamond lead. South came up with the winning line, but there was some question about whether he was right on a mathematical basis.

North and South were using their own version of the Precision system. South's one-club open showed 16 points or more, and the two no-trump response showed 12 to 14 points and a balanced hand. Three no-trump was natural, and as usual when a no-trump hand goes past three hearts was a cue-bid showing that North held the heart ace and a hand suitable for a spade slam.

With all the other controls in his own hand, South bid the slam directly. He knew that North could not have enough strength to make a grand slam an acceptable contract.

The declarer played low from dummy on the lead of the diamond jack, and won with the ace. He then drew trumps, cashed the ace and king of hearts, ruffed the diamond queen and led a third heart.

If the queen had fallen doubtless from East, the slam would have been a sure thing. As it was, East had to lead clubs, which made matters easy for South.

Experts who were shown the hand afterward endorsed South's play by instinct. But cold mathematics showed that he was wrong by a tiny margin of about three percent. If West had held four or five hearts to the queen, he would have had to fall back on a club finesse. But complex calculations are impossible at the table, and there is something to be said for the wrong play that wins.

THE POEMS OF TRUMBULL STICKNEY

Edited by Ambers R. Whittle, Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 316 pp. $17.50

Reviewed by John Hollander

THIS is a long overdue book. Trumbull Stickney, who died at 30 in 1904, left behind him a largely ignored book of verse and some remarkable poems in manuscript. These, with additional material, were brought out posthumously in 1905 by his friends George Cabot Lodge and William Vaughn Moody. F.O. Matthiessen included some of these in his "Oxford Book of American Verse," and Conrad Allen some in his wonderful Modern Library anthology of 20th-century American poetry, from which my whole generation learned so much. Edmund Wilson wrote a short but intense essay on Stickney in 1940, and there was an unpublished Princeton dissertation on him in 1947. But it was only in England, and in 1968, that there appeared a good collection of his poems, both published and from manuscript, with a bibliography and critical introduction by James Reeves and Sean Haldane.

In an attempt to remedy this and at the urging of Edmund Wilson, a complete collection of Stickney's verse has been published in a series that started out recently with the beautiful Yale poet H. P. Pinsky. (whose "Hush" and "The Rose," a great undergraduate favorite in my time, has withered) and which promises Edith Wharton's poems in a future volume. The Stickney text has been edited and introduced by Ambers R. Whittle (who neglects in his bibliography to mention Sean Haldane's "The Fright of Time," published in 1970, the only book-length study of the poet); the volume includes Wilson's essay, Stickney's early lyrics and fragments of verse drama (such as one on Julian the Apostle, who so fascinated Swinburne, Pater, Tennyson and Gore Vidal) and the remarkable group of poems that give Stickney, along with John Brooks Wheelwright of a later generation, such urgent priorities for revival.

Joseph Trumbull Stickney came from an expatriate New England family. Born in Geneva, he grew up in London, Italy and Switzerland. He studied classics (and perhaps became romantically involved with an older woman) at Harvard (graduating six years before Wallace Stevens) and returned to France to study at the Sorbonne, where in 1903 he took the first doctor's degree in Greek ever awarded an American. The final year of his life was spent teaching Greek at Harvard and in suffering the physical pain of a brain tumor, from which he died the following spring. His Harvard was that of Santayana; his émigré Europe that of his friends Henry Adams and Bernard Berenson. His poems, all sonnets and strophic lyrics, full of a romantic Hellenism and a formal sense sometimes stronger

All-Star Park Perfect For a Show of Power

ATLANTA, July 25 (UPI)—The heavy hitting National League All-Stars, with a somewhat reluctant starting pitcher, take on the American League's best tonight in a National League stadium noted for its home runs.

The Nationals, gunning for their 13th victory in the last 15 games, will be aiming for the fences in the cozy confines of Atlanta Stadium which twice in its seven-year history has led the league in home runs hit.

George Allen is at it again. Allen, coach of the Washington Redskins, built his team into a National Football League contender last season with a series of trades, most of which were conducted with his old team, the Los Angeles Rams.

Apparently confusion has taken place among some of the finest talent in the NFL. Allen is anxious to get all the material on Los Angeles is willing to give up. And that's why kick return specialist Alvin Raymond is a member of the Redskins.

Raymond, 30, an eight-year veteran, has been acquired by the Rams in exchange for a future draft choice.

The acquisition of Raymond no doubt was provoked by the continued absence of star punter runner Speedy Duncan. Duncan failed to check into the Redskins' camp in Carlisle, Pa., camp for the third year in a row.

In another announcement from the Redskins' camp, running back Junior Coffey announced tentative plans to retire from football and devote full-time to horse racing. Coffey, a seven-year veteran, has been an off-season member of a number of thoroughbred racing circuits for the past four years.

Nicklaus's Failure

Jack Nicklaus's failure to win the third leg of golf's modern grand slam, namely the British Open at Muirfield (Goodland), is further proof that golf is was the greatest of games of all time. Hogan was the only golfer in the winners' emotionally before the event took place. He came, he saw and he conquered as everybody expected him to do. The others came and saw but there was always the doubt about their conquering—nobody had the same surefire precision of the TRE ICEMAN (Hogan) that is so essential to ensure victory. When Hogan came over to win the British Open (in 1963, and he only came once) he was 4 shots ahead of the pack at the finish. As well as that he bettered his score in each round as the champion progressed. Hogan was the greatest of them all—we shall never see his like again.
